The design of the School is to afford a thorough, practical and scientific education in the principles of the Common and Statute Law of the United States; the English and American System of Equity; the Public Law of the United States and Europe; the Roman Law—Ancient and Modern; and Theoretical and Comparative Jurisprudence.

These subjects are taught with reference to their historical development as well as their practical application, the aim being to encourage scholarship and research as well as to fit for professional practice. The mere accumulation of information, therefore, is subordinated to the more important end of developing the faculties of the student and of training him in habits of legal reasoning.

The method chiefly employed is the free discussion by the professor and students of selected cases and other authorities, with the view of arriving at the principles of the law by the process of inductive reasoning.

In addition to the strictly professional courses, the rich curriculum of the School of Political Science, covering courses not only in Public Law and Comparative Jurisprudence, but in History, Politics and Economics, is open without additional charge to students of the Law School.
